This is mainly because of the fact that while I have an Apple TV, I can only rip a movie off of an iTunes purchased DVD to an iPhone, and the iPad is much easier to carry around than an iPhone. That said, I would not recommend that you buy the Sony's iPad Ripper software if you're looking for a way to watch iTunes purchased movies on your iPad, because as far as I can tell, the Mac version can only rip DVDs. It's not that that the software isn't capable, it just seems like an afterthought, and a simple one at that. To be fair, the PC version offers better performance, and is a far more sophisticated piece of software, but the Mac version also offers more features. For example, the Mac version can set the minimum bitrate and maximum bitrate for any of the video and audio tracks, and also set the video's aspect ratio. It can also convert a video from an iPod into a format that will playback on the iPad, and any of your other iDevice, while keeping the original audio and video tracks intact, which is something that Sony's iPad Ripper cannot do. What the Mac version cannot do is convert an iPod video into a format that will playback on an iPad, and while this may seem to be a minor

issue, it is

System Requirements:

In order to play GWAR, you must have an Intel Pentium 4 processor running at 1.4 GHz or faster, or a AMD Athlon Processor at 3.0 GHz or faster. You also need a 32-bit operating system. A Pentium 4 or AMD Athlon Processor is not required. You can play on systems that use a Pentium 3 or Pentium Pro Processor, but your performance will be reduced. You should also have a current copy of the game, which is available here: The
